Where Are We Going?

Zakarie Boubekour draws his inspiration from dystopian and science-fiction universes such as Star Wars, Warhammer, Mad Max, Fallout, and League of Legends, which marked his childhood. These fictional influences, often featuring patched and improvised costumes, have guided him in this upcycling project. Zakarie's design incorporates elements from these imaginary worlds, combined with utilitarian construction principles inspired by military clothing.

This translates into a technical, robust aesthetic that offers comfort and protection. The pieces are mainly crafted from leather and fur, durable and solid materials that evoke the iconic landscapes and characters of his childhood fantasies. This project embodies a creative fusion of personal nostalgia, childhood worlds, and ecological commitment.

Material

Coat and backpack made from leather scraps, pants made from various fur scraps.
